

How do you deal with feedback from your lecturers? – Transcript

How do you react to feedback?

Niya: I guess the problem sometimes can be when the feedback that you got for one assignment is very hard to apply to any other assignment.

Ugena: Yeah, exactly.

Niya: I try to apply what they've mentioned, but only if it can be applied. And it can't necessarily be applied to other things.

Emily: I always get 'expand on this', 'analyse more'. I think obviously it might make sense to you what you're trying to say, but to the reader it's not. So that's why I think it's just trying to say something in a different way, that, you know, Bob down the road will understand, not just your lecturer.

Holly: Yeah, I always have a habit of putting a quote, or something I've found, just in [the assignment] and then because it sort of explains itself, I'm like 'well, he's said it, he's explained it and I don't have to do anything more'. But then obviously that doesn't say anything, that doesn't help my case, so I have to go in and really take it apart, which sometimes I forget to do.
